Trump claims win, but revelations not all flattering

By Debra J. Saunders

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump declared victory after Attorney General William Barr made public a redacted version of special counsel Robert Mueller's report on Thursday, although the document pointedly did not exonerate the president on the question of obstruction of justice.

However, Mueller's report concluded that neither President Trump nor his 2016 campaign colluded with Russia's "sweeping and systematic" interference in the 2016 election.

"If we had confidence after a thorough investigation of the facts that the president clearly did not commit obstruction of justice, we would so state," the report says. But based on the facts and the law, "we were unable to reach that judgment."

Flush with victory, Trump told a gathering of the Wounded Warrior Project Ride in the East Room he was having a good day. "It's called, 'no collusion, no obstruction,'" the president said.

The report portrayed a president who readily lied to reporters, bullied staffers to do likewise and dangled pardons before indicted former associates, but notably did not take steps to prevent emails or other damning communications from reaching Congress or the special counsel's office.

Barr told journalists before the report's re-

WASHINGTON — Attorney General William Barr's release of a redacted version of special counsel Robert Mueller's report on Russian election meddling and the Trump campaign was met with criticism by Democrats who demanded Thursday that the special counsel testify before Congress about his findings.

"The American people deserve to hear the truth," said House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif.

Democratic leaders also claimed that Barr distorted the findings outlined in the report.

"Special counsel Mueller's report paints a disturbing picture of a president who has been weaving a web of deceit, lies and improper behavior and acting as if the law doesn't apply to him," Pelosi said in a statement.

She claimed Barr tried to cloak those findings in his comments.

Republicans, though, seized on conclusions that there was no evidence to conclude any criminal wrongdoing by President
